

Paloma Picasso Chart Key

By Eric Francis

Yours is a life lived at the edge of time, treading a narrow path. This is described by your late-degree Sun and other planets. Everything seems to be on the brink of going out of control, yet you've learned to keep your focus and maintain a balance of intention and surrender to existence. It's not easy, calling for constant practice. But you do it.

Notice the pattern involving your Sun, Saturn and the centaur Pholus. With Pholus involved, you must be careful about intoxicants of all forms, principal among them, fame and reputation. When you are born of notorious parents, you learn how to see people for who they are, not who they are known to be. This can be disillusioning and it's no surprise that you prefer the companionship of people who are private figures, not public.

Your chart possesses the power of the Matriarchy. Despite a tense relationship with your mother, you've learned how to harness and respect the power of the feminine. This has required you to learn how to be gentle as much as how to be bold and authoritative. You know that in the end, your life is yours to live and therefore you must do it with meaning, purpose and intention: your own, not someone else's.

As a creator, you know how to wear the public like a mask: to reflect to people something about themselves; and in your private life, to hold a mirror to your closet relations. While they don't always like what they see, they trust you for being truthful.

While you are driven by many forces, and guided by many sources of wisdom, the single most important factor in your chart urges you to give your instincts – your body and your senses – the final vote in any matter. This is the Moon square the lunar nodes. When something feels right, you will know it. And when something feels wrong, you must take heed. You have learned this many times, though it will be reassuring to know this is the clearest and most focused message of your chart.
